

Abstract

North Korean Refugee Supporting Policy Based on Barrier Factor Analysis

This article is focused on analysis of barrier factors for North Korean refugees (NKR) those who settle down in Korean society based on their special features. It is the most important for NKR to participate in economic activities for their settlement.

They have special characteristics which are rarely known to Korean policy makers. Those are physical weakness, psychological syndrome, verbal barriers, and social bias. Social enterprises could be one of the most desirable options to promote NKR's hiring with a point of their collective behaviours. This article is trying to find the better ways for NKR's social adaption in Korea.

Key words: North Korean Refugee, Social Adaptation, Social Enterprise, Settlement